

ABSTRACT

Nucleic acids suitable for PCR amplification are isolated from a sample easily and rapidly by dissolving the sample in a buffer containing surfactant and salt, heating the obtained solution, subjecting the heated solution to gel filtration; and collecting a fraction containing nucleic acids.